A. INTRODUCTION

The law governing companies in India is contained in the Companies Act, 1956, as amended by and under the Companies Act, 2013. The Companies Act, 1956, was enacted on the lines of the English Companies Act, 1948. It came into force on and with effect from April 1, 1956. It regulated the whole range of organisation and management of the companies in India. The Act suffered from innumerable weaknesses, inadequacies, and loopholes, which called for amendments from time to time till date. No Act in our country, excepting the Income Tax Act, has been amended as many times as the Companies Act, 1956, in response to the demanding needs, requirements, and challenges of the time. The first major amendments were introduced under the Companies (Amendment) Acts, 1960, and 1962, followed by the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1996, with effect from March 01, 1997. The introduction of the Depositories Act, 1996 and subsequent amendment thereto by the Amendment Act, 1997, necessitated introduction of consequential amendments, in the Companies Act, 1956, which were made by and under the Companies (Amendment) Act, 1999.

The Companies Act, 1956, as amended by the Companies Act 2013, does not apply to (1) companies, established under Special Acts of Parliament, such as Life Insurance Corporation of India; (2) partnership firms, which are governed by the Indian Partnership Act, 1932, except that the Companies Act, 1956 prescribes the maximum number of partners in a firm; (3) co-operative societies, which are governed by separate Co-operative Societies Acts; (4) societies like clubs and professional associations, which are governed by the Societies Registration Act, 1860, and (5) trusts, which are governed by the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, though the Companies Act, 2013, prescribes the voting rights in trusts having shareholdings therein.
